

NATIVE PLANT GUIDE 2022

JUST THE RIGHT FIT: A PLANT FOR EVERY PLACE

By Katie Schmidt, Horticulturist and Grounds Manager

Through years of designing native landscapes, we've encountered many gardening challenges and requests; plants for erosion control, flowers in a certain color scheme, species that spread vigorously by seed or specifically do not spread by seed, filling many acres or creating a tiny pocket garden. Native plants are the most ecologically-friendly choice for all of these situations and choosing wisely will save a lot of time and labor.

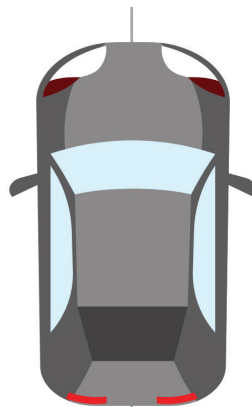

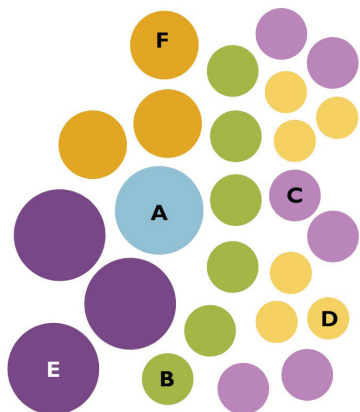

Enter: Native plant varieties and cultivars. These plants are forms of native species that have certain desirable characteristics. They might be shorter or taller, more colorful, less aggressive, upright, etc. Varieties are species found naturally occurring in nature (e.g. Baptisia var. 'Minor'). Their seed grows true-to-type. A cultivar (or 'cultivated variety') is intentionally bred by humans and propagated vegetatively (e.g. Rudbeckia 'Glitters Like Gold'). Sometimes a plant can even be both! Cultivars can be the result of mutation or hybridization. Research is ongoing about the pros and cons cultivars offer native pollinators, and we are following that information closely.

As of now, we encourage people to choose the plants that best fit their site. For example, if you want goldenrod but have a small space, the native Solidago canadensis will likely overpower the garden in a few short years, often leading folks to give up their native garden entirely. Instead, choose a variety like 'Wichita Mountains' or a cultivar like 'Golden Baby' that is less aggressive. If you have the space and like the aesthetic, opt for straight natives only and enjoy the beauty and wildness that will follow!

MUSIC-INSPIRED HABITAT GARDEN KITS

We love to offer these staff-curated kits to make gardening with native plants simpler, and to take the guesswork out of choosing winning combinations. Whether you have shade or sun, a tidy aesthetic or a wild side, these garden kits will create a concert of color all year long. AND the birds, butterflies and bees they attract will be music to your ears!

BORN TO BE WILDSCAPE

Garden on the wild side with these pollinator favorites. Robust and ready to thrive, these species are extra yummy to native insects and extra vigorous to match! They spread easily, so give them space and watch the wildlife flock to your yard. Plant these medium to tall species in the back of the garden or along a fence, with average moisture and seven plus hours of sun.

- b. Asclepias syriaca or sullivantii x1

- d. Liatris spicata x6
- e. Penstemon digitalis x3
- f. Symphotrichum spp. x3

PURPLE RAIN GARDEN

These species will not only feed pollinators and host caterpillars, they will wow you with pink and purple all season long! We created a moisture-loving line up of purple flowers, with a touch of yellow for contrast. Best planted in a low spot, near a downspout, or a spot that's easy to water in dry spells. Full to part sun, at least seven hours over the course of the day.

- a. Asclepias incarnata x3
- b. Eupatorium 'Little Joe' x2

A HAZY SHADE OF SUMMER

Finding plants that flower in the shade is difficult, so let us help! These species will provide color in spring, summer and fall even in dry shade. Native to Eastern Kansas and the Ozarks, these plants will do best in less than six hours of direct sun throughout the day, and occasional watering during dry periods even after establishment.
