PREFACE

The first part of our Annotated Checklist, covering the 2001 species of Ferns, Fern Allies, Gymnosperms, and Dicotyledons native or naturalized in the Washington-Baltimore Area, was published in March 2000. Part II covers the Monocotyledons and completes the preliminary edition of the Checklist, which we hope will prove useful not only in itself but also as a first step toward a new manual for the identification of the Area's flora. Such a manual is needed to replace the long-outdated and out-of-print Flora of the District of Columbia and Vicinity of Hitchcock and Standley, published in 1919. In the preparation of this part, as with Part I, Shetler has been responsible for the taxonomy and nomenclature and Orli for the database.

As with the first part, we are distributing this second part in preliminary form, so that it can be used, criticized, and updated while the two parts are being readied for publication as a single volume. Corrections and comments are welcome. We hope that our now-completed Checklist stimulates much new fieldwork to check the current status of the local flora relative to what is being reported by us.

The complete Checklist is available on our Web Site for the Flora of the Washington-Baltimore Area (www.nmnh.si.edu/botany/projects/dcflora) in pdf format and as a searchable database. The Herbarium of the Washington-Baltimore Area ("D.C. Herbarium"), consisting of nearly 60,000 preserved plant specimens collected over the past 125 years or so, is also accessible at this site. It has served as the basis for the Checklist. The Web database provides the label information for the specimens, distribution maps for the species, and, in many cases, a link to an image.

We gratefully acknowledge the help of many persons. We are indebted in the first place to Carol Annable, Christine Begle, Marcie Beyersdorfer, Laura Lehtonen, and Susan Wisner--all former assistants of Shetler--for their vital help in compiling the original working materials, including the initial list. In particular, Christine was largely responsible for compiling the working list from Hitchcock's and Standley's Flora (1919) and Hermann's Checklist (1946).

Help with the grasses was provided by Paul M. Peterson (especially, Agrostis, Bromus, Cenchrus, Cynodon, Muhlenbergia) and Robert ("Rob") J. Soreng (esp. Festuca/Schedonorus, Hordeum, Poa). Rob reviewed the entire draft of the Poaceae and offered many useful comments. In preparing their recently published Atlas of Carex for Maryland and the District of Columbia (2002), Christopher T. Frye and Christopher Lea examined all of our Carex specimens and annotated many. Our treatment closely follows theirs, and we thank Chris Lea in particular for responding to many questions. Robert R. Haynes kindly annotated all of our Najadaceae and Potamogetonaceae, and his annotations guided our treatment of these families. Likewise, we were fortunate to have Larry J. Davenport annotate our Lemnaceae, providing the basis for our treatment. Mark Strong revised and annotated our collections of the species formerly treated broadly as Scirpus, and his treatment is followed. He also annotated other Cyperaceae and some Juncaceae. Dan H. Nicolson continued to give of his time and expertise to solve nomenclatural problems.

Finally, we thank the Botany Section of the Department of Systematic Biology and especially W. John E. Kress, Head of the Section, for their continued encouragement and support of this project; and the Virginia E. Crouch Memorial Fund for Native Plant Conservation and Research, administered by Larry E. Morse of NatureServe, for partial support of the printing and distribution of Part II.

INTRODUCTION
by Stanwyn G. Shetler

A brief history of floristics in the Washington-Baltimore was presented in the Introduction to Part I. The procedures and format for the Checklist, given in Part I, are repeated here for the convenience of the user. There are three innovations in this part that should make it easier to use than the first part. Running heads indicate the family or families treated on the pages, common and scientific names are in the same index, and genera with more than 15 species, i.e., genera likely to run to a second page or more, are indexed to species.

Geographic Coverage

As indicated in the Preface, our Checklist is based in the first instance on the D.C. Herbarium. The limits of the D.C. Herbarium, as expanded in the 1930s and 1940s for the Conference on District Flora, are the limits of the “Washington-Baltimore Area” as defined by Hermann (1941, 1946) in his Checklist and also used here.

This Area (see map inside front cover) is bounded on the north by the Maryland-Pennsylvania line, on the east by the Chesapeake Bay (western shore), on the south by the Rappahannock and Rapidan Rivers, and on the west by the east foot of the Blue Ridge Mountains. It includes the Bull Run and Catoctin mountains, but excludes Shenandoah National Park and the Eastern Shore. Encompassed are the District of Columbia and the following 23 counties and 5 independent cities in Maryland and Virginia:

Maryland

Counties: Anne Arundel, Baltimore, Calvert, Carroll, Charles, Frederick, Harford, Howard, Montgomery, Prince George’s, St. Mary’s. Cities: Baltimore

Virginia

Counties: Arlington, Culpeper, Fairfax, Fauquier, King George, Lancaster, Loudoun, Northumberland, Prince William, Richmond, Stafford, Westmoreland.
Cities: Alexandria, Fairfax, Falls Church, Manassas

So defined, the Washington-Baltimore Area represents a radius of coverage from the Capitol in Washington, D.C., of about 50 miles, more than three times the 15-mile radius of the previous Floras.

In compiling the Atlas of the Virginia Flora, Harvill et al. (1992), included the independent cities within counties for the purpose of mapping specimen distributions. Thus, Alexandria specimens were mapped as though from Arlington Co., Fairfax and Falls Church specimens as though from Fairfax Co., and Manassas specimens as though from Prince William Co. It is important to keep this in mind when voucher herbarium specimens from these cities are checked against the Atlas.

Taxonomic Considerations

The Checklist includes all native and naturalized species of vascular plants known to occur or to have occurred within the defined geographic area. Naturalized species are alien (exotic) species introduced into the area that are now believed to be reproducing and spreading in the wild without cultivation if only on a limited scale. A few species are included that appear to spread only as clones but persist indefinitely once planted, often in wild places long after there is any clear indication of introduction (e.g., Hemerocallis fulva).

Taxonomic categories below the rank of species (notably, subspecies, variety, and form) are not recognized formally as separate entries in the Checklist but may be mentioned in the comments or cited as synonyms under the appropriate species where necessary to avoid confusion. The families are arranged alphabetically.

The ever unfolding new evidence from molecular studies and phylogenetic analyses poses quite a challenge to the contemporary floristic worker. On the one hand, one wants to follow the evidence insofar as possible and recognize only monophyletic taxa, regardless of the impact on time-honored concepts and nomenclature. On the other hand, taxonomy is practical and useful only to the extent that it remains relatively stable through time. Thus, change must come in a measured way and not get too far ahead of the users. Furthermore, the new evidence must stand the test of time.

The new evidence is having a profound effect on the concepts and limits not only of genera and species but also families, which, consequently, are in a state of flux, especially in such groups as the Liliaceae s.l., as traditionally circumscribed. Whether or not to stick with familiar, traditional family circumscription was a dilemma faced repeatedly. I have not followed any authority entirely and have tended to opt for traditional usage where there is still no general agreement on a new classification.

I have adopted a relatively broad concept of genera and species, tending to lump more than to split and in debatable cases to stay with widespread practice, trying to strike a balance between stability and change. On the whole, changes that are widely accepted have been adopted, whereas changes that do not yet enjoy wide acceptance are being deferred. The time for more comprehensive revision will be when a new manual is prepared by specialist collaborators. In cases where species have been combined and split seemingly at will, I have largely followed the evidence of the local material in making my decision whether to lump or to split. Inasmuch as it is the only relatively current, comprehensive guide to the flora of the Northeast, which has been very widely used since it first appeared in 1963, the Gleason and Cronquist Manual (1991) has been an especially important influence in deciding which species to recognize.

Revision Procedures

Species have been admitted into the Checklist only on the basis of one or more voucher specimens in the D.C. Herbarium or a reliable published record, as, for example, in Brown and Brown (1972, 1984) or Harvill et al. (1992).

The starting point was a compiled list of all the species recognized in Hitchcock and Standley's Flora (1919) and Hermann's Checklist (1946). This preliminary list was then evaluated and documented by checking it species by species against the D.C. Herbarium and the other designated "Primary Sources" (see below) of floristic records for Maryland and Virginia. The list was further supplemented, winnowed, and refined by consulting the "Principal References" and selected other publications as appropriate. The annotations in the Checklist are based on all of these sources. Every effort was made to account for all the species that have been recognized and the names that have been used widely in the region since the publication of Hitchcock and Standley's Flora.

The nomenclature of the Checklist, including the author citations, largely follows Kartesz (1994, 1999) or, for grasses, Soreng et al. (2000-). In confused cases, judgments were made on the basis of all the evidence at hand.

Primary Sources

These are the key publications on the flora of the Washington-Baltimore Area. Every species in them was evaluated for possible inclusion, and every species that they attribute to this Area should be accounted for in the Checklist, as a recognized species, synonym of a recognized species, or an "Excluded" species (see below). Following are abbreviated citations of the Primary Sources used in one or both parts of the Checklist; full citations are given in the bibliography (see p. 73):

Principal References

These are the regional manuals, Floras of adjacent states, and other essential reference works that were consulted routinely in the preparation of species entries for the Checklist. Because some of these manuals and floras have long been standard references in the Washington-Baltimore Area, every effort has been made to account, through the synonymy, for the names used in them whenever they differ from the names used in the Checklist, so that users can move easily between the Checklist and these familiar works. Following are abbreviated citations of the Principal References used in one or both parts of the Checklist; full citations are given in the bibliography (see p. 73):

Format of Species Entries

A species entry contains some or all of the following elements of information in the standardized order and format indicated:

1. Accepted scientific name (Latin binomial) and author of name

The scientific names of native species are in bold Roman type and of introduced species, in COPPERPLATE GOTHIC BOLD. Authors' names are abbreviated according to Brummitt and Powell (1992), and a key to all the abbreviations in Parts I and II can be found at the end of this volume. An "x" is placed in front of the specific name (epithet) of a species thought to be of hybrid origin, and the known or putative parent species may be given parenthetically immediately following the scientific name and author (e.g., Sphenopholis xpallens (Biehler) Scribn. (S. obtusata xpensylvanica))

2. Common names

Following the scientific names, one to several common (vernacular) names are given in preferred order. They were drawn mainly from the Principal Sources and the Principal References, especially Gleason and Cronquist (1991), Strausbaugh and Core [1978], and Brown and Brown (1972, 1984). These particular manuals have long been standards in this area. Fleming et al. (1995) also was consulted routinely. An attempt was made to put the most widely used name first, but there are no standards for common names; hence, they become a matter of author's and, ultimately, user's choice.

When to hyphenate always presents a problem, and seldom is an explanation offered in floristic works of the rules followed, if any. If two or more words make up a compound name, they may be (1) treated as separate words, (2) hyphenated as though one word, or (3) run together as one word (e.g., gama grass, gama-grass, gamagrass for Tripsacum dactyloides). Different authors and editors follow different rules. If enough authors are consulted, one often will find the same name treated all three ways.

Because of the logic that we have followed, we have tended to hyphenate more names than most authors. We have hyphenated words that, in our opinion, belong together as a compound name or name modifier, but traditionally are not run together. Such names should be indexed as one word, and we have used this indexing criterion as a rule-of-thumb in deciding what to hyphenate. This is particularly true of words that together constitute the common name of a genus (e.g., Solomon's-seal, for Polygonatum; coral-root, for Corallorhiza). If, in such cases, there is a tradition of running the words together, we have tended to do likewise (e.g., bunchflower, cottongrass, spikerush).

In many cases, we have hyphenated two words often used separately, because we do not consider such words as, for instance, "root" (as in "cucumber-root") to be stand-alone, indexable names for kinds of plants. We have not used hyphens after “false” and “wild” (e.g., false spikenard, not false-spikenard) in most cases, however, unless that has been traditional (e.g., wild-celery). Names with these adjectives tend to be used in compound form even without hyphenation or running together.

3. Synonyms

Scientific names used in the Primary Sources and Principal References that are deemed to be synonyms of the accepted name are given in parenthesis following the common names. Synonyms from the D.C. Herbarium have also been included if they appeared frequently on specimen labels. For users of this herbarium, it will help to account for names that were used locally for a time but do not necessarily appear in the earlier Floras and checklists.

4. Distribution

Distribution, which follows synonymy, is indicated only to the state level by the boldfaced abbreviations DC, MD, and VA, in that order. (D.C., for this purpose, is treated as a state.) A state is listed only if we have one or more specimens in the D.C. Herbarium from that state or a reliable observation or published record, which then is cited parenthetically. If there is only a single specimen in the D.C. Herbarium from the state, then the county where collected (for MD and VA) and sometimes the locality are also given, and the specimen itself is cited parenthetically. (Occasionally, more than one specimen per state is cited). This alerts the user to the cases where the documentation of occurrence is very limited and perhaps also very old.

5. Status in the flora

As mentioned above, the names of the native species are boldfaced, and the introduced, non-native species are indicated by a different font, COPPERPLATE GOTHIC BOLD. The generic name appears in this font only if the genus itself is also alien to the local flora. Examples: SCHEDONORUS PRATENSIS, Poa TRIVIALIS.

If a species is introduced, its status in the flora is characterized briefly following the distribution summary. Three, ultimately arbitrary types of introduced species are recognized: (a) “Naturalized” - a species that is freely reproducing in the wild and is often long and widely established in the flora; (b) “waif” - a species that has appeared here and there without apparent deliberate introduction, not necessarily reproducing and persisting for long, and continues to be an accidental element of the flora; (c) “escape” - a species escaping from cultivation perhaps repeatedly in several to many places and often spreading, particularly locally, but not necessarily persisting and becoming fully naturalized. Introduced plants of the latter two types are also regarded as naturalized in the broad sense, as defined for inclusion here. Other characterizations of status in the flora in the species entries should be self-explanatory.

6. Comments.

Comments about the species, if any, constitute the final element of the species entry. Many entries do not have comments.

Excluded Species

These species have been reported for the W-B Area but are not included in our Checklist for the reasons given.

1. Carex aestivalis M.A. Curtis ex A. Gray. Previous inclusion based on one US specimen (MD: Frederick Co., Catoctin Mt., F.J. Hermann 13753, 1957), which has since been re-identified as C. virescens Muhl. ex Willd. by Lea (Nov. 2000).
2. C. alopecoidea Tuck. Mentioned by H&S (p.108) on basis of report by Holm (1896), whose specimen (T. Holm s.n., 1888), at the time in herbarium of Catholic University and now in US, was re-identified recently by Lea (Feb. 2000) as C. annectens (E.P. Bicknell) E.P. Bicknell.
3. C. crebriflora Wiegand. According to Atlas, widely present in VA sector, but Lea (correspondence, Nov. 23, 2001) has seen no authentic specimens from there and doubts its presence in the W-B Area.
4. Gladiolus ×gandavensis Van Houtte. Reported in Atlas (p. 136), under “Novelties, Waifs, and Taxa of Doubtful Establishment,” from several counties in VA, including Lancaster Co. in our area. Although it may persist from planting, it does not really establish itself and is, in any event, of questionable taxonomic and nomenclatural standing as a species. Accordingly, not included in Checklist.

5. Hordeum brachyantherum Nevski. Reported under H. nodosum L., a misapplied name, in H&S, FJH 1941, and FJH 1946 on basis of specimens identified as H. pratense Huds., also a misapplied name. These specimens (DC: E.S. Steele s.n., 1896; F. Blanchard s.n., 1890; VA: W. Hunter s.n., 1886 (Fairfax Co., Accotink)) have proved to be H. pusillum.
